David is a highly skilled legal professional specialising in serious crime, fraud and financial crime, asset recovery under POCA (Proceeds of Crime Act), and military law.

He defends and prosecutes in some of the most serious and legally complex cases, including murder, attempted murder, firearms offences, sexual assault, rape, modern slavery, death by dangerous driving, and drug conspiracies. David is frequently instructed as both leading and led junior counsel in large, multi-handed cases involving organized crime groups, where he represents either the lead defendant or acts for the prosecution.

With experience in handling sensitive material, David is adept at making PII applications. He is also accustomed to working with vulnerable individuals, including young defendants and witnesses with mental health issues or learning difficulties. David works closely with intermediaries to ensure that vulnerable witnesses and complainants understand court procedures and are able to provide their best evidence. His experience also includes conducting Ground Rules Hearings and sensitive cross-examinations under section 28, ensuring that vulnerable witnesses are treated with care and respect.

David's expertise extends to fraud and financial crime, where he advises both corporate clients and government agencies on complex matters such as money laundering, bribery and corruption, and fraud.

In military law, David represents members of the armed forces both in the UK and internationally, providing specialised legal advice and representation.

Outside of his legal practice, David is passionate about Newcastle United and motorcycles, interests that offer a well-rounded balance to his professional life.
